

Liz Duffy

President

International Schools Services

In July 2015, Liz Duffy became the President of International Schools Services (ISS). For the previous 12 years, she served as the 12th Head of The Lawrenceville School, a boarding school founded in 1810 in Lawrenceville, NJ, serving 815 students in grades 9-12 from around the world. During her tenure, she led comprehensive curriculum redesign and strategic planning efforts, introduced new student leadership, international travel and environmental sustainability programs, fostered an inclusive culture on campus, strengthened the School's finances and operations, and raised over $350 million.

Ms. Duffy graduated magna cum laude from Princeton University with an A.B. in Molecular Biology, and she received a joint MBA/MA in Education with a certificate in Public Management from Stanford University.

Ms. Duffy came to Lawrenceville with an extensive background in the educational foundation world, having worked at the Ball Foundation, the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation, The Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, and Princeton University.

Ms. Duffy currently serves on the board of The E.E. Ford Foundation. She is also past chair of the board of Princeton AlumniCorps, past president of the Eight Schools Association, an emerita trustee of the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation and the Geraldine R. Dodge Foundation, and a past trustee of Princeton University and the National Association of Independent Schools, among other organizations.

Ms. Duffy is married, and she and her husband have two college-aged children.
